TREE OF LIFE

SLEEPING BEAUTY

TREE OF LIFE

80 x 120 cm

That Tree has cost us the Garden of Eden; may be that one day the Cherubim placed to guard the way to the Tree of Life – as per Genesis, 3 - will let us pass, thus allowing men to become immortal: a quite boring perspective.

The Tree has been fashioned fixing to a wooden panel several tree branches to which the trunk has been added made of polystyrene covered with strips of tree bark; leaves and flowers of the Tree have been made using strips of plastered jute; the flowers show a hard-stone at the centre, symbolizing the fruits that gave the ancient Gods their immortality; around the trunk a female body has been fashioned using strips of plastered jute; from the bottom of the trunk, at belly level, a baby – made from a doll - sticks out from the trunk, still partly merged with it: life is beginning over again; finally the whole sculpture has been painted and bright varnished.

SLEEPING BEAUTY

The Prince Charming got lost in the Forest and did not show up; beauty is vanished and the Princess is still sleeping, perchance dreaming of being awoken by the Prince; however the hole in place of the heart leaves little hope for a future resurrection: love's labour's lost.

The upper-right part of the wooden panel has been coated with strips of plastered jute to make up the undergrowth where the Princess is laying; the head has been made from a wooden root to which several branches have been added to make up the hair; the eye shows a blue spiral iris made of sailing ropes and a black pupil made of hard-stone; the body has been fashioned in clay mixed with polystyrene, then covered with strips and ornaments of plastered jute; finally the whole sculpture has been painted and bright varnished.
